Once upon a time in a distant land, there lived a beautiful queen named Zoulvisia. Some people thought she was cruel, others kind. Lovely fountains bubbled in her courtyard as a tall, valiant knight strode into her presence. He had some shocking news about a threat to the kingdom. Let's listen in:

As you can see, things are very serious. It seems a feared bandit is in hiding and it is up to Sir Oliver to discover and stop him.

Why don't we try looking in on the resident heroes of the kingdom? What do Isabel and Unicorn Bob think about what is afoot?

It seems the duo is walking along a heavily wooded path near a small village. Poor Unicorn Bob is very hungry, but refuses to eat grass— after all he is not a horse.

They have just met up with a seemingly simple baker, who is really the dreaded bandit in disguise. Isabel does not know his secret, and only her reputation as a skilled swordswoman is keeping him at bay. Hoping she will help him escape Zoulvisia's knights, the bandit is all cheerfulness to our heroes:

Sounds like they will be staying in the same village as the bandit baker. Sounds rather dangerous to me, this isn't likely to end very well.

Sir Oliver, the Knight Commander of Queen Zoulvisia, quickly tracks down the village. He, and other noble knights, ride up at dusk to survey the town below.

The wind is fiercely cold up on the ridge, and their horses are restless, but they must stop the bandit before he can hurt more innocent travellers. What is Sir Oliver telling his men?

Let us hope the knights will be successful in their venture! Now, why don't we see what Isabel and Bob are up to? The sun is setting and it is time for a hot, hearty meal in the local pub.

At first, the innkeeper was not very keen on having a unicorn inside, and it takes all of Isabel's charm and persuasion for Bob to be allowed inside. It was not a moment too soon, either, for the night was growing quite chill compared to the merry interior with its crackling fires.

A group of musicians gathered in the corner struck up a song, partly to tease the innkeeper. Whatever are they singing about?

Oh no! It looks like Sir Oliver wasn't very clear about the baker really being a bandit in disguise. Isabel is never able to abide innocent people being hurt and challenged the knights by mistake!

As Sir Oliver's knights roughly seized the bandit baker, he shouted for help. Before they could drag their quarry away, Unicorn Bob galloped forward, piercing one of their arms with his horn. Then all mayhem broke loose!

In the festivities, Isabel asked the baker why the knights were after him. He finally confessed that he was the dread bandit of those parts, but that he was sorry for what he had done and wanted to mend his ways. After making him promise to stick to baking from then on, Isabel and Bob both had a long night's sleep before journeying on to help the innocent and fight for justice.

After a long night ride, Sir Oliver came straggling into the palace, ashamed of allowing the bandit to roam free once more. He dreaded having to face the queen, but steeled himself and walked into her throne room.

She was as graceful and elegant as always, but he could not bear the disappointment on her face as she saw he was alone. How did Sir Oliver explain what happened?

The queen is quite confused about Isabel and Bob, isn't she? Let us hope she does not choose mistakenly to torment our heroes. After all, the kingdom is depending on them!

THE END (for now)
