Once upon a time, there was knight in the kingdom of Zoulvisia. His name was Sir Gabiano, and he was worried that the queen was being too strict with her people. As his squire, Markus, was nearly ready to become a knight himself, his master tried to warn him to be wary of the queen and not always follow her orders without question. The squire listened carefully, but someone else had overheard as well. Who was it?

Wounded and alone, in terror of Sir Oliver, the squire staggered to a nearby village, desperate for help.

Where are the heroes Isabel and Unicorn Bob? Will they be able to save Markus?

There they are in the market, as Unicorn Bob tries to persuade Isabel to buy him some fresh pastries. Their funds are beginning to run low, however, so poor Bob will have to go hungry again. Just then Markus stumbles into the crowded area shouting for assistance. Isabel rushes to his side at once!

Isabel is very good at tending to wounds, having had so many herself. The squire will be just fine, even if it hurts a lot right now. Just as she is putting the finishing touches on the bandages, Bob snorts with surprise and anger.

It is Sir Oliver, the knight who wounded the squire, no doubt come to finish what he started!

What will they do? The knights are closing in on all sides on the square. Let's hear what Unicorn Bob has planned:

They are safe for now, but with the knights after them how long will that last? Isabel suggests a daring idea. They will take the squire to her friend Belphoebe in the forest. There is just one problem—Isabel's friend is a Huntress and kills all men on sight who enter her lands.

Isabel must persuade Belphoebe to take the squire under her protection. That way the knights cannot harm him, as they would not dare enter the woods of the Huntress. If she fails, Markus will be slain anyway. Meanwhile, Sir Oliver has not been idle.

Once again, the benevolent queen has not got all her facts straight. Sir Oliver firmly believes that Markus and his master were part of a terrible plot to murder Zoulvisia and take over the kingdom. We know better, of course, but she is forced to order him to hunt down the squire before he can do any more damage.

At least Zoulvisia doesn't want to hurt Markus, and maybe she will hear his side of the story when he arrives at the palace. For now, Sir Oliver must find him before Isabel has a chance to hide the lad.

Our heroes are even now reaching the outskirts of Belpheobe's forest. Will they survive?

The outer guard of Belphoebe have seen Markus! Let us hope Isabel can protect him.

It sounds like Markus will be safe with the Huntress. She is an expert healer as well, so no doubt he will be good as new in no time at all.

Hopefully the squire has learned not to act rashly and will think before attacking people from now on. Queen Zoulvisia will no doubt forget all about the incident and in a few years, Markus will be perfectly safe to go out into the kingdom again. For now, he has hundreds of lovely women to care for him. That can't be a very bad thing, now, can it?

THE END (for now)
